

Daily Programme.

From the Navigator.

Yesterday evening, the Queen Elizabeth let go her lines, thrust off her berth and began her transit of Southampton water into the Solent. After passing Dock Head on her port side, she made her way past Fawley Power Station. She then made several bold alterations of course round the Calshot and Brambles turns and passed between the Solent forts. From here she altered to the south, disembarked her local pilot and began her passage to the south. In the early hours of the morning Queen Elizabeth set south westerly courses through the English Channel: continuing to head south, some 30 nautical miles to the north of Cherbourg, France.
