From the Navigator.

Throughout the night Queen Elizabeth continued en passage, making her way through the Ushant Traffic Separation Scheme. This Traffic Separation Scheme is a highway of the sea, used to regulate the flow of ships in congested waters. The island of Ushant, some 10 nautical miles off the port side of the ship, is a French island at the south-western end of the English Channel which marks the westernmost point of metropolitan France. It is the only place in Brittany, except for Brittany itself, with a separate name in English. Throughout the day Queen Elizabeth set southerly courses in the Celtic Sea, bound for the Bay of Biscay.

Jane Slade: The Inspiration for Daphne du Maurier's First Novel!

A love letter written in 1873 from a ship in Hamburg was the catalyst for Daphne du Maurier's writing career. Her first book 'The Loving Spirit' brought her international recognition and launched her writing career. It was a novel about three generations of Cornish seafarers and shipbuilders who were dominated by one woman. It was, however, very closely based on a real family and so here is the truth behind the fiction; the story of one remarkable woman and her ship.

We investigate and look at the evidence.
