Tonight: Smart Attire

Queen Mary 2 Voyage M535

Time zone: UTC +1

Sunrise 8.45am Sunset 7.49pm

At sea, en route to Bremerhaven, Germany

From the Navigator

Today we exit the Norwegian Sea and re-enter the North Sea. The North Sea is characterised by its particularly shallow depth, making it a popular area for oil and gas exploration and offshore power generation. Throughout the day we will sail on a Southerly course through the North Sea, passing through the German Bight area and past the island of Heligoland around 13NM on our port side in the early hours of tomorrow morning as we approach the port of Bremerhaven. Bremerhaven sits at the mouth of the River Weser, the second longest river in Germany.

Professor David Sanders

Why do eye-witnesses get it so wrong?

Most people think an eye-witness to a crime could provide strong evidence to a court of law, but there have been many cases where completely innocent people have been convicted of serious crimes based on mistaken eye-witness testimony. David examines one such case in detail to explain why it happened, and how it led to changes in police procedure.

Illuminations

11.00am

Dr Daniel Verscharen

Extreme atmospheres – what is the weather like on other planets?

The atmospheres of the planets in our solar system show an extraordinary range of weather conditions. This talk will explore the extremes, ranging from violent sandstorms on Mars over liquid Helium rain in Jupiter's atmosphere to the hot and toxic gas in Venus' atmosphere. Modern space missions measure the weather on these planets and give us an understanding of the extreme weather patterns in our solar system.
